Opposition Active.

When the house met this morning the opposition prepared to follow up the advantage gained last night and attempted to force the government to give some idea of its intentions.

When the Scottish ecclesiastical bill came up for discussion, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, leader of the liberals, moved to report progress for the purpose of forcing an adjournment of the house until Monday, when Premier Balfour has promised to make a statement in regard to his opposition to the house.

to the house.

The liberal leader based his motion on the ground that no business should be transacted after the defeat of the government last night.

Government Sustained.

Premier Balfour opposed the motion and made a statement to the house, saying that he would not ask the members to take up any party meas-ure or to go through with the order of greatest excitement prevailed The greatest excitement prevaled throughout the sitting and the proceedings were carefully followed by large crowds in the galleries.

Premier Balfour was received with a great ovation from his followers when he entered the chamber. He gave no indication, however, of what his intentions are in regard to resigning.

It must be borne in mind that these men are not revolutionists, as the term is understood in Russia.

Czar to Meet Kaiser.

It is understood that the Czar, during the yachting trip he starts on to-morrow, will meet with the German Kaiser, in whose good will and good judgment he has profound confidence. That the Czar and Kaiser will discuss That the Car and Kaiser will discuss the critical situation in Russia is regarded as beyond doubt, and that the opinion of the Kaiser will have great weight in deciding his course is also believed to be certain.

The engineer saw the blood dripping from the man's wound and telephoned to the Seventh precinct station. Two policemen responded and found the young man lying bleeding and exhausted on the grass near the top of the hili.

The patrol wagon was summoned from the Georgetown precinct. A hurried run was made to the Georgetown University Hospital.

The young man was immediately placed upon the operating table. A number of stitches were taken by the doctors in order to close the wound.

The physicians stated that the jugular vein was not severad. The razor blade had missed it by a fraction of an inch.

After the wound was dressed the police took the young man to the station. There he was searched and locked up in a cell until his friends arrived and took charge of him.

To the desk sergent he said:

"I don't think I will ever get well. That's the reason I wanted to die today."

The navy is so honeycombed with disaffection that the record of every man in the crew has been most carefully investigated, so that no one of revolutionary tendencies, or who is in the least disaffected, should be numbered in the crew.

When placed in the ceil with the bandages around his much-hacked throat, he fell upon the iron bench in the corner and went to sleep. A policeman was stationed at the door of the cell to prevent the despondent man from doing himself further injury.

The police say the young man had not intimated suicide to any of his friends. Nor ere there any notes or letters found in his pockets or his room.
